- To encourage clients and design professionals to understand and embrace strategic issues, to inform and improve specific developments.
- To research the needs of building users and explore the success of projects, in order to influence future developments.
- To publicise successful schemes and highlight examples of good practice, as perceived by the client whilst exploring the implications of social, institutional and technological change.
- To influence those who commission buildings to appreciate long-term issues rather than short-term, low cost solutions.

The Learning City - the HEDQF Conference 9.30am The Building Centre February 14th 2008

The HEDQF event exploring the impact of universities on cities takes place on Tuesday 14th February. This one day symposium will include case study presentations and a debate exploring the opportunities and benefits universities bring to host cities.

"The Learning City: For many centuries, Universities have played a leading role in the intellectual, commercial, health-care and cultural lives of the cities in which they are based. In doing so, they have often contributed positively to the regeneration of many towns and cities. This relationship is increasingly important in the knowledge society of the 21st century and indeed Governments are placing greater emphasis on the economic impact of a university and its teaching, research and knowledge transfer. This conference therefore comes at an appropriate time and will look at various aspects of the physical inter-relationship between higher educational institutions and the cities in which they are based"

Ian Caldwell, HEDQF Chair
