A one day conference organised by RIBA East

Thursday 18 March 2010
9.15 am - 4.45 pm

The Auditorium
Fitzwilliam College
Storey's Way
Cambridge CB3 0DG

How difficult are you finding the planning process? Is there so much hassle? The amount of additional time spent preparing drawings and reports, studying assessments and so on seem to have escalated over the last few years. Where is the streamlined planning system that we were promised? And has society and the environment benefited from the current planning system with improvements to the quality of designs?

By fully understanding the planning system and processes and responding positively then the chances of a successful application can be greatly increased and disappointment to clients and designers reduced

This one day conference aims to explore the issues and provide practical help to those involved with making planning applications, be they clients, planners, agents, designers or developers. The aim is how to realistically improve design quality, improve efficiency, accept that in some cases certain schemes may not be appropriate, and be of benefit to the most.

The main subject areas will include

- The current Planning Policy and future projected changes
- Important planning guidance
- Permitted development
- Making Planning Applications
- Appeals
